

5 Steps in Disengagement Work

Kay Donley

1. Accurately reconstruct the child's placement history.
2. Identify various attachment figures.
3. Decide who were the most powerful of these figures in influencing child's perception of self and others.
4. Gaining the cooperation of the most significant attachment figure available.
5. Having that person give the child permission to become a member of another family.